Mix of cultures and knowledge.

The migration is the movement of people from one place to another.

The internal migration means the migration within one country, and the international migration is the movement from one country to another.

Spain has always been a country of emigrant people, Spanish people used to emigrate looking for a better job, so migration is something normal here. Now it is happening again, people go to England or Germany, sometimes just to study and sometimes looking for a job because they can't find any job in Spain. There is a substantial difference; people who have to emigrate now are much better qualified than those who moved in the 60s.

In addition to this there are a lot of people from different countries, like Rumanians, Colombians or Moroccans who have come here, to Spain, thinking in a better lifestyle.

I have based my opinion on the following information, I know a family from Colombia who came here 4 years ago, they are now very well here, they are one family more, but I know it was very difficult at first because there are a lot of racist people who don't care about the other people's feelings. My Colombian friends didn't have a lot of problems because they stayed at a small town and we became friends without any problem.

I also lived for a week like an immigrant in Germany, it is not the same because it was an exchange but I was living abroad and everything was different. The culture is a little different and I learnt a lot; that's the best thing, learning with books is not the same as learning with an experience. I enjoyed it a lot and in a future I would like to be a real immigrant in another country.

Migration is everywhere, there are a lot of people who left their family in their country and they risk everything in a travel, they just want a better life.

On the one hand, migration is very positive, it breaks down boundaries which are not necessary, all the cultures are mixed and we can realize we all should be equal.

On the other hand some countries are losing people with studies and knowledge, so their country is not going to take advantage of them. It's also sad that the best qualified youth are doing the worst-paid jobs or those which require a lot of physical effort but in crisis time every job is a good one and this situation seems to be justified. Some people don't want immigrants in their country because they think immigrants will revoke their jobs.

In conclusion, therefore, migrations have good and bad things, but in general, it is an improvement for the countries and also for the people, both for the ones who emigrate and for those who don't, in terms of the knowledge about other cultures and other lifestyles.

Sources: www. Ghs-mh/migration/define/define.htm

sauce.pntic.mec.es / jotero

LUCÍA GIL FUENTES. IES Turgalium. Trujillo. Spain.